Director's Statement

My name is Danech San. I'm from Battambang, in the northwest of Cambodia. I started working with Anti-Archive, a film production company in Phnom Penh, in 2015, first as a casting and production assistant for Diamond Island, which later won the SACD Prize at Cannes Critics' Week in 2016. It's been almost three years now that I've been involving myself in filmmaking. Each time a project finishes, I try to travel. I travel to different places to relax after working and also to explore new things in different worlds. And each time I come back, I feel strange, I feel like I'm looking for something, like something is missing. So in 2016, after coming back from a trip to Busan Film Festival for my first time, I realized something: maybe because I always worked in film, it's always been about supporting others on their projects. But I've never had my own project, one that I own. So from that point, I was just thinking maybe I should write something. So I just started writing a small, small idea from my memories and from the dreams stuck in my mind. Through that, I collected all those ideas, and I came up with one story that is more about expressing the feeling inside, because me, myself, I'm struggling a lot to express what I feel and what I really think of. So this story is very personal for me: it unpacks feeling and fear, relationships and attraction.

This film was funded with the generous support of over 300 individual donors set up on Indiegogo for the "Echoes from Tomorrow" project to fund the production and completion of three short films by Cambodian first-time filmmakers.
